FOUR DALLAS TEACHERS WHO HAVE HEART POWER—ONE VISITS THE PRISON CELL CARRYING THE SONGS OF ZION THEY SPEND THEIR LIVES FOR OTHERS.

Mrs. E. O. Lindsey, Mrs. A. R. Day, Mrs. A. V. West and Miss T. O. Boswell—The Lesson Taught by the World War.

N. W. Harlikee.
The world war which came suddenly to a close has taught the American people many important lessons, lessons that could not have been taught in any other way. Many lessons have been taught, many hard lessons, lessons that if heeded in time, will be of great value in thousands of ways. The one sad lesson was the awful commentation in the purview of the education rather than the want of education, not only in Negro schools and facilities for both the blacks and whites throughout our south land. The statesmen and citizens are both awake to the direful need of better educational facilities for all her citizens, and much is being said in commendation of the exalted position taken by all classes of the southern press which is just now giving impetus to the cause of education as never before, and this will mean more salary for the poor-paid teachers who can scarcely exist.

There is no doubt that the world war has taught that education, while not a guarantee for better citizenship, will go along ways in the direction of making a better citizen, for a Republic can not long exist where more than half of the citizens are ignorant of the first principles of a democracy and a woeful disregard for her laws and tenets. A democracy means more schools, more intelligent men and more of every element that must make up the republic, not the name, but the principles enunciated must be that is designated in an ideal American and all that it means to a free people in this land of the Free. Freedom can not long exist where the facilities of the right kinds of schools are wanted and sadly needed in the rural district and where the teachers also are needed. If there was ever a time when the welfare clause in the Federal Constitution could be construed to mean general aid to the common schools of the southland, this is the time, this is the day, for it is now needed as never before as revealed in the hundreds of cantonments revealed, dismantled, and where thousands of young men, our best blood, were shown to be void of education. We owe it to this generation to provide for future contingents as there is no guarantee in the bosom of the human family against wars for these will come according to Divine forecasts. When we consider those who are building up society, we are called to consider the efforts put forth in the education of their children, and the sacrifice they are making to accomplish the purpose. The Rev. Sam Jones, the great revivalist of the south, once said that the old maids of the country were doing a remarkable work in educating other people's children through saving of the money of the street, old maids that they may accomplish much for those who needed their assistance. But this is not only true of old maids, it is true of other persons who have no children of their own. There are many who live for the interest of others.

Mrs. E. O. Lindsey, a teacher in the Dallas public schools for more than a score of years, is the one woman, who deserves the highest consideration in her effort along the line of educating other people's children as she has none of her own. She is a worthy example of what one may do, if she but tries. Mrs. Lindsey some years ago, took under her roof and into her own castle, three girls and trained them to be honest and industrious. These girls grew into womanhood under the tender care of Mrs. Lindsey, who directed their training and sent them to college and other schools at her own hard earned expense. She was the one woman who seems to have never tired in working for the young children whom she took under her roof to care for and to put them on the road to success in the drama of life. Her queenly and maternal love so lovingly and sympathetically to each other more than to children of different family relation. Some psychologists have endeavored to account for this family relation by blood relation and also by association and heredity, but we have seen children just as loving and affectionate toward each other, and in some cases more endearing than those of the same family, but perhaps these may be exceptions to the law of family association. What ever the relation existing in the personality of Mrs. Lindsey, it is much stronger than it is in the ordinary person, except in the affection of the writer, whose heart over flows for the gentle love for all children regardless of race, and wherever he sees a berry of young children at play and full of sun shine and myth there his heart is also. The love of children in the heart of the writer is not confined to the narrow circle of his own children but it goes far beyond that circle, however, it is strong as it could be in the family circle, but what cause it to spread out for other children has never been successfully accounted for any more than the cause of one flower absorbing the red rays of the sun, and another the pink, nor the variegated colors, and the beautiful color absorbed in the Easter lily, nor why the rippling waves of the ocean make different impression on the minds of different persons, or why one sees more beauty in the tinctures painted by the gorgeous colors of the setting sun as his paints all nature with his brush and easel in the sky just above the western horizon and all the objects are tinted and bespangled and some of those scenes still remain in the vision of the writer when he was a bare footed boy and he endeavored to explain them to the old people on the plantation, who shook their heads and said there is "Another Fool" for the want of sense.

But Mrs. Lindsey has done her full share in the efforts which she has put forth in the education and training of Miss Mary Hall who finished her college at the Howard University, taking high rank after completing the high school course in the Dallas high school. She now ranks high as teacher in the schools of Atlantic City.

Miss Pearl Randall and Miss Lee Virgie Randall finished at the Dallas high school, and Virgie Randall took a more extensive course at the Prairie View Normal Institute. All three of the girls became teachers.

Mrs. Lindsey is the oldest graduate of the Dallas high school, being an alumna of the first graduating class, and then afterward finishing at the Dallas high school. She now ranks high as teacher in the schools of Atlantic City.

Mrs. Adele B. Day, who is at present connected with the Ninth Ward school is a graduate of the Oberlin College, school which takes high rank. While in this institution, she specialized in music while she was taking the regular classical college course. She received her B. S. degree well up in the rank. She taught Latin and Algebra in the Paul Quist College. She also taught in the Corsicana schools for four years and likewise in the Tyler City Schools. Mrs. Day is a woman of strong convictions and conscious moral scruples, working at all times for the advancement of the young whether in school or in their homes, she has a word for them. She has not thought it beneath her dignity to go on the Sabbath to the jails and sing the songs of Zion to those confined in the prison walls, and to read the Bible to them.

Mrs. Day has made much sacrifice in the education of her daughter, Miss Nannie, now finishing up her Senior year at Howard University. She deserves the highest commendation for the efforts put forth through her energy and self denial that her daughter both in the Dallas high school, and in the great Howard University. Miss Nannie, is pushing the regular teacher's college course, has made a remarkable career as a student, gaining a half of a school term after recovering from a severe case of sickness. Mrs. Day has also a model teacher in the night schools, handling the elderly class of persons, working improvement in these schools.

Miss Tina O. Boswell is another teacher well fitted for special work along the line of practical drawing both life and from objects. The work performed by her in this line of art is praise worthy. She is a graduate of the Colored high school of this city and the Prairie View Normal. Perhaps her greatest power lies in the rule and control of unruly large pupils of rough and uncontrollable temper, for large boys who would be to a common teacher and give a deal of unnecessary trouble, will bow to her as though she carried a magic wand in her hand and in some mystic manner win them over to without a word, where another teacher would fail completely. This is what is known as tact, and for a better name, we would call it heart power expressed in a deep knowledge of pedagogic and psychic laws. She is educating her brother Dewey Boswell at Wiley University. She is a teacher in the night schools.

Perhaps Mrs. A. B. West has taught more scripture incidentally to her classes than any other teacher that the writer is acquainted with in his reach and observation. Mrs. West is a graduate of the Normal course of the Fisk University, and a teacher of wide experience. Some years ago, she took a special course at the Martha Vineyard summer school to qualify herself for the great work of teaching. More of our teachers would take these summer courses if their salaries were increased, what would be expended in the way of salaries would accrue to the children and thereby increase the wealth of the city and build up a pride in her great bulwark.
